

Surviving Alaska Railroad Stations

Anchorage: There are four Alaska Railroad-built buildings here, all in use; two stations, a freight depot, and offices.

Denali Park: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Fairbanks: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Girdwood: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Nena: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Nenana: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Palmer: Originally built by the Alaska Railroad, now used as a community center.

Seward: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers and restored.

Skagway: A White Pass & Yukon Route station and roundhouse are located here, the former still actively serving passengers and is a visitors center for the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park

South Palmer: An Alaska Railroad station is located here, still actively serving passengers.

Talkeetna: Two Alaska Railroad stations are located here, one still actively serving passengers, the other used for storage. Also, a third ARR depot is located here, currently home of the Talkeetna Historical Society.

Wasilla: Originally built by the Alaska Railroad, is now used by the Greater Wasilla Chamber of Commerce.